Dedication

Since those crazy seventh grade language classes, you have devoted your concern and encouragement to the betterment of our student body. Mr. Houser, you have guided us in times of administrative-student rivalry, consequently giving us the spirit to defend our pride and privileges.

We walk through your open doors as equals. Your standards are to make, not break, the sometimes half-hearted student. To generate an interest and effort is to give us the moon and the stars.

With sincere gratitude we dedicate the 1980-81 Chronicle to you, Mr. Houser. Thank you for all the support and caring you have provided our class with.

The Work Of Happiness

I thought of happiness, how it is woven
Out of the silence in the empty house each day
And how it is not sudden and it is not given
But is creation itself like the growth of a tree.
No one has seen it happen, but inside the bark
Another circle is growing in the expanding ring.
No one has heard the root go deeper in the dark,
But the tree is lifted by this inward work
And its plumes shine, and its leaves are glittering.

So happiness is woven out of the peace of hours
And strikes its roots deep in the house alone:
The old chest in the corner, cool waxed floors,
White curtains softly and continually blown
As the free air moves quietly about the room;
A shelf of books, a table, and the white-washed wall -
These are the dear familiar gods of home,
And here the work of faith can best be done,
The growing tree is green and musical.

For what is happiness but growth in peace,
The timeless sense of time when furniture
Has stood a life's span in a single place,
And as the air moves, so the old dreams stir
The shining leaves of present happiness?
No one has heard thought or listened to a mind,
But where people have lived in inwardness
The air is charged with blessing and does bless;
Windows look out on mountains and the walls are kind.

BY: May Sarton

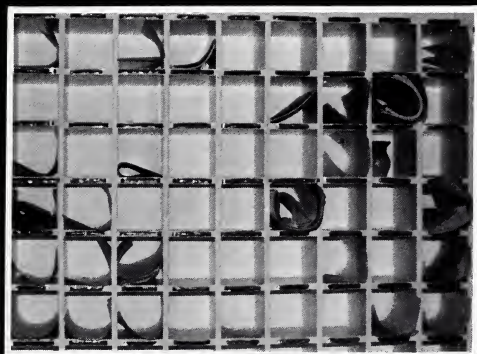

.....and I wish to each of you, members of the class of 1981, the "happiness woven out of the peace of hours," "happiness which is growth in peace," and "the happiness which charges the air with blessings and does bless."

Odds and Ends

Imagine All The People

We gather together
To take the attendance
I count you and mark you
And send your names on
To get you in trouble
for not being two places at once

How Absurd! What you are doesn't show on my list,
But if lists I must make
Then make them I shall.
So attend, my lovelies, to a new dance today:

Has anyone here seen a fawn by the road?
Who stayed up late watching the sky for superman?
Has anyone lately been struck?
Does anyone grieve for John Lennon?
Whose heart is bursting for no particular reason?
How many choose self-destruction? How many are in self-repair?
What magnificent soul have I still not noticed?
Whom have I never made smile?

What is a person, anyway?
A name, a job? A thing in a place in a time?
No, We are our sorrows, our fears, our fantasies;
We are seperate sets of strangeness
Nearly colliding, sometimes.

 each other more over the summer than school, but I don't care just as long as we see each other. I hope being in different classes won't seperate us. Well next year we'll see each other 8th grade, but need a calculator. I'll be a blast. You'd need a freshman to count the guys I've gone through this year! But sure what's your problem!
 Come on hidden away. You've got a secret
